

continued from Page 9

Webmaster and former 82nd Airborne Division Paratrooper led off the attack, leading his squad in a probing attack into the heart of Zussman. The early attack into the city against the 'rebel's' drew heavy fire, and provided the distraction necessary for the main element of HHC to begin the main assault on Zussman Hotel.

"Our mission was simple," said Fisher. "Create a diversion, basically make contact, without becoming decisively engaged. The difficulty in a mission such as this is to suppress the instinct to exploit the success we found."

The soldiers of HHC found their

concluded on the next page

Top: An FTX participant tries to take cover on the side of an embankment from the barrage of paintballs being fired by the OpFor.

Above: A 100th Division tunnel rat prepares to leave one of the many sewer openings at the MOUT site.